Boil water advisories end for two more water systems

OLYMPIA — Boil water advisories have ended for about 90 residents in the Naselle area of Pacific County and for the Cedar Grove Mobile Home Park in King County.

The Naselle advisory affected about 90 residents along Parparla Road, where floods washed out a water line last week. Although water service was restored, the residents remained under a Department of Health advisory until late Thursday so the water could be tested to ensure it was safe to drink.

The 122 residents of the Cedar Grove Mobile Home Park, situated about eight miles southeast of Renton, had been under a boil water advisory since Jan. 9. The park's water system operator issued the advisory as a precaution because of rising river water. The water has been tested and is safe to drink. The advisory was lifted late Thursday.

Only three water systems remain under flood-related health advisories across the state. About 325 people in Snohomish, Kittitas, and Yakima Counties still need to boil their water. Full water service has been restored to about 8,900 people.
